

PREPARATION FOR THE FIRST STEPS IN THE REAL WORLD

This past week, I mainly prepared for the business symposium on Monday, which will be discussed in next week's weekly report. I finally perfected my resume and website for the feedback of the professionals at the symposium. I successfully learned how to create a successful website and overall digital portfolio. I did more research on a LinkedIn and a professional Twitter account as well as a website. I gained lots of new knowledge and skills in the field of creating a digital portfolio. I overcame a lot of adversity this week when learning how to create the website. I came across a lot of issues with creating the website, including learning how to attach files to the buttons and how to organize the website. I will add more components to the website as the year progresses, but I feel really good about the website right now as a starting point.

Additionally, I brainstormed more about my original work idea and I finally came across what I consider to be great idea that is practical and stretches my limits and I am really excited to complete this project. I faced challenges when brainstorming, such as hitting roadblocks and coming up with non-practical ideas, but I eventually came up with the idea that I hope to create and truly capture my vision.

Goals for this upcoming week is to improve my digital portfolio, especially by beginning to connect with professionals on LinkedIn and to gain lots of new knowledge in my upcoming research assessment. I am also going to improve more on my time management, which I did improve on this week.
