Stage: Research

AND THE JOURNEY BEGINS

This past week, I learned the basics on how to create an assessment and how to write a research assessment. I ended up analyzing three articles on my topic and they were all exciting to read. With each bit of research that I do on my topic, I am realizing more and more that this is what I want to do for the rest of my life. It is seeming more and more perfect. The articles on the procedures of an interventional radiologist and what it is like to be one is truly exciting to me and I am excited about what is in store for me as the year continues. I am pleased with how my research is progressing and I am excited about what I will learn next week,

I have to admit that this week was not as productive or efficient as I would have liked it to be. I had pushed my research assessment and resume off to the last minute due to the heavy workload of the week including numerous tests and quizzes. Despite the heavy workload, I still should have done better with managing my time. I am working hard on my time management skills and efficiency, because as I know, there is no room for slip-ups in time management whatsoever in college.

Next week, I aim to start working on my research assessment on Tuesday and do an equal amount of work on it from Tuesday to Friday in order to do more quality work and spend lots more time on it. Also, I aim to finish all work that I have to do for all classes by 9PM every night in order to build good study habits so that I have more time to put toward ISM as the intensity of my research and work increases.
