ENTRANCE INTO THE PROFESSIONAL WORLD

This past week in ISM, I attended the business symposium where I was interviewed by three different professionals and got feedback on my resume. This symposium was extremely useful in developing my interviewing skills and helping me control my anxiety. I felt little nervousness when interviewing and now I have more confidence in my interviewing skills. It was very beneficial to my growth to talk to these professionals and practice interacting with new adults whom I am not familiar with, which is a necessary skill in the real world. Additionally, I received feedback on my resume that was very useful and developed my understanding of what a resume needs to look like. Overall, this symposium was a great success.

Additionally, I wrote my fourth research assessment over the specific subspecialty of interventional radiology which was interventional oncology. Interventional oncology was a growing interest of mine that developed through the first three research assessments and I am glad that I was able to do research on it for this assessment. The more assessments that I complete, the more comfortable I am getting with writing the assessments. Also, my interest in the field of interventional radiology is continuing to grow as I am conducting these research assessments.

This week was very successful with time-management and completing assignments effectively and efficiently. The goal for next week is to start contacting professionals and to work on my original work after I conference with Mr. Speice.
